

agree that a reordering of such displays can only grow out of people's getting a personal grip on things. But rather than seeing this as a kind of mass loss of control, a contagion of emotions, I see the diagnosis having to do with the media and the marketplace infiltrating and turning to their advantage what were once markers of the private, intimate, and familial. Diana's mourners responded out of an altered context of intimacy, and it is only by understanding this that we can recalibrate our emotional displays.

A special charism?

Lawrence J. Gillis's splendid Last Word, "Forgive Me, Solicitor" [September 26], elicited this response from my friend and attorney (a former president of the Florida Bar Association): "I guess I've handled a hundred criminal cases in my forty-year career, and I don't remember having any of them confess or offer to confess. If Mr. Gillis has everyone confessing, he is especially endowed."

Also, belated thanks to Sean Callery for his explicit, positive review [August 15] of the Pete Hamill novel, Snow in August. On the other hand, I shouldn't have read the review because it opens with the word-for-word last paragraph of the book, thereby removing the sting and mystery of the work. Still, shalom!

Respect for 'Respect'

I found myself reading Alane Salier-Mason's moving essay "Respect: An Italian-American Story" [October 10] for the second time today. It mirrors both feelings and observations I had growing up in a neighborhood that was then predominantly Italian too.

My rereading reinforced my intention to obtain the anthology that includes it. Alas, the Commonweal citation lists the publisher and title of the anthology but not the author/editor. The full information may help facilitate my search in the local bookstores.

From the editors: Beyond the Godfather (University Press of New England, $36, 320 pp.) was edited by A. Stephen Ciongoli and Jay Parini.

Spirit lacking

In his review [October 10] of "Nothing Sacred," Frank McConnell's choice of quotes—from a friend, "anyone who thinks that religious life isn't melancholy doesn't know much about religious life," from Karl Rahner on what it is to be religious, "to believe that it is meaningful for a human being to speak into the endless desert of God's silence," and from Graham Greene's disdainful reference to "the habit of piety"—reveals a mindset that shows little evidence of the fire of the Holy Spirit. Does faith have something to do with that? I believe it does!
